Description:

Acting Classes are an experience unlike any other classes. They are exciting, passionate and entertaining. Scene Study Classes train each actor in real-person-place, behavior-oriented, moment-to-moment acting work in the tradition of the great American actors. Exercises are kept at a minimum so the Actor can concentrate on discipline, research, high-quality scenes from good scripts whether from plays or movies. Rather than emphasizing any one technique or school of acting thought –such as Stanislavski, Meisner, Adler, Strasberg 'sense memory' etc, the Approach utilizes a down-to-earth appeal which has been developed over 40 years by Milton Katselas. For instance;

- What events are associated with this story?
- What is the specific nature of this character?
- What happened to them before the scene?
- What would a real person do in this given circumstances?

Different actors have different ways of tackling the craft of acting, and by teaching over 20 different concepts, ideas and techniques that actors can learn and utilize to master whatever challenges faces them, whether from the nature of the role or the nature of the project. The result is an actor who can deliver a rich, believable performance no matter the circumstances, from film shoots and television where there is little or no rehearsal, to the theatre projects where there are weeks of rehearsal, to the very audition that gets these jobs.

The students are instructed through the unique, down-to-earth, non theoretical three-pronged Approach – Acting, Attitude, and Administration.
